

Introduction for Dr. Stephanie deLusé

“Mind, Money & Emotions: What We Do, Why & What Might Work Better”

- Please practice this out loud once or twice before the event so you are comfortable with the words and phrasing and can share it easily and with enthusiasm. :-)
- This introduction takes approximately one minute to deliver.
- Most people wonder how to pronounce my last name...if you are too, try saying it like this dehLoosay

Thank you for introducing me! Here’s what you’ll deliver/say:

Dr. Stephanie deLusé is a psychologist and interdisciplinarian who’s written a variety of books and articles. She is a faculty member in Barrett, the Honors College at Arizona State University.

Two of her favorite classes to teach are “Money & Meaning” and “Civilization and the Human Sense of Self.” In these classes, participants examine their assumptions, aspirations, and habits—including around money!--and how those relate to both daily and major life decisions that affect themselves, their families, their businesses, and larger communities.

Perhaps more important than her academic background, however, is that her whole life she has been spending money, wasting money, worrying about money, saving money, and earning money (and not much of it as a college teacher!)...all of which adds to her expertise on the topic she shares with us today...

“Mind, Money & Emotion: What We Do, Why, and What Might Work Better:

Please help me welcome Dr. Stephanie deLusé
